WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

Dry next several days with patchy morning valley fog. Wet pattern returns with light precipitation Wednesday with heavier rain and mountain snow Thursday and Friday. Thinning high clouds across the region early this morning. Temperatures are in the teens and 20s in the colder mountain valleys, in the 40s to lower 50s across the thermal belts and in the 30s through the Central Valley. Expect some patches of fog once again across the southern Sacramento Valley and northern San Joaquin Valley.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

The combination of high pressure aloft and offshore flow will continue to bring fair skies and above normal temperatures through Tuesday to most areas. A weak cold front dropping through southwest California Thursday into Friday will bring a return to near normal temperatures, with showers possible, with best chance for areas north of Point Conception. Surface gradients are still offshore but have begun to trend onshore. There are some local gusts in the 35 to 45 mph but nothing widespread enough to justify an advisory.
